These four Christmas ornaments by Gord. D. were turned on a lathe from unique materials that are usually thrown away. The first one on the left was made out of sumac and comes complete with a worm hole. Ornament #2 is part of a root from a cedar tree which has a red coloured wood running through out it in unique patterns. The short ornament #3 was turned from the infamous invasive species buckthorn. It is very interesting to turn as it has various shades of a orange red colour in the wood. The one on the right is part of a banksia nut that hails from Australia. All the ornaments have been finished with a Beall buffing system.

Fokker DR1 - The frames for all remaining wings were assembled the warm side of Christmas with Mike M. reporting that the last Aileron can be expected in the New Year. A few more widgets and brackets to be added and we should be ready for flight tests! The photograph below is of the undercarriage with all four brackets installed.

The tablesaw top is a wonderful spot with lots of projects being designed atop it and some even built there. It also gets it's hands into all sorts of mischief including this fine selection of screws which were found entrapped in the dust collector pipe strung well below. They were likely being sorted the wrong side of coffee break and abandoned before the job was done. Not that anyone would actually do this but what if the next user was just there to cut a piece of plywood and picked up a screw on the leading edge, the answer is 11 milliseconds. You'll have no doubt seen it coming and your blink reaction would have kicked around 150 milliseconds. As the old adage reads "more is better"! This is good because we still need you to check the fan intake at the far end of the collector where you will find:

 OUTREACH *****

Here is a window shelf put together for St James Church by Tim, Perry and Ethan. It looks like it made it in time for Christmas.
